Always try the clothes on before buying them.

Many people buy motorcycle clothing that is too big. You will mostly use these clothes during warmer seasons and you should therefore try out the clothes using thin under garments.

The garment is primarily intended to protect you and if the garment is too large there is a risk that protectors and other enhancements are not in the correct place. If you want to dress for colder weather put other clothes on top instead of under your motorcycle gear. This tip also applies to textile garments with membranes.

Also take into consideration that the garment will feel quite differently if any lining is removed.

Leather stretches! Textiles do not!

Leather garments stretch. We recommend buying leather garments which fit tight. Textile garments do not stretch so they should not fit as tight as leather.

The only place that our leather products will not stretch is in the waist if they are equipped with zippers to be connected to the jacket.

Usually textile clothes do not stretch but after wearing them for a while they too will become more flexible and protectors will sit comfortably in the right place.

The same rule for gloves

Leather gloves stretch. Buy a glove that fits tight.

Textile gloves does not stretch as much. They should fit comfortably at purchase.

Adjustable protectors

Our products are designed to be comfortable on a motorcycle. This means that the protectors can feel strange in an upright position.

For example, the knee pads sits further down when standing up but if you sit on a motorcycle they are in the right position.

Many of our jackets and pants have adjustable protection with our unique Velcro system that gives you the ability to adjust the protectors position suiting your particular anatomy.

Remember that the correct length back protector can vary based on the type of motorcycle you use.

You should use a back protector covering an area as large as possible without affecting comfort while Protectors should be located as close to the body as possible and cover an area as large as possible without affecting the control of the vehicle.

Moisture = cool!

Moisture is usually what makes the rider uncomfortable.

It's easy to forget what kind of underwear to use but it's vital to the comfort of the ride. Wearing the wrong type of underwear, such as garments made from cotton, can lead to sweat being trapped and thus cooling you 20 times faster than if you had worn the right type of underwear such as wool or polyester.
